The Academic Procession

The colorful tradition of wearing caps and gowns in the Commencement procession is more than 800 years old. It dates back to the days when students were “clerks” – that is, members of the minor clergy – and wore monkish gowns and hoods. In those days of unheated classrooms and garret sleeping quarters, the hoods served a practical purpose. The hood ends in a “tippet,” which is a sort of hallow tail. When the hood was not pulled over the head, the tippet served as a convenient pocket. The hood is only an adornment today. It is not part of the robes worn by associate degree graduates. The cap, or mortarboard, came into use after the hood ceased to be worn on the head. It seems to have evolved from the square biretta of Renaissance churchmen. The tassel on the mortarboard may be either black or the “color of the faculty” or, for the holder of a doctor’s degree, it would be gold thread. Many foreign universities have their own distinctive headgear instead of the mortarboard.

Both the gown and the hood indicate the degree held by the wearer, or the one he or she is about to receive. The gown for the bachelor’s degree has pointed sleeves. (Bachelor’s hoods are rarely worn in the United States.) In the masters’ gown, the wearer’s arm projects from the sleeves at the elbow or, in the more modern gowns, at the arm. The doctor’s gown has bell-shaped sleeves. Bachelor’s and master’s gowns have no trimming, but the doctor’s gown is faced down in the front with velvet and has three velvet cross-bars on each sleeve. This velvet may be either black or the color of the faculty.

Graduates of some institutions, both American and foreign, may wear gowns in the color of the university which awarded their degrees. For instance, crimson for Harvard, blue for Yale, etc. In the United States, the hood is edged with velvet in the color the faculty and lined with the color of the university conferring the degree.

The color of the faculty referred to below indicates the field in which the degree was taken.
