

A Study Focused on Part Time Faculty Issues

My colleague in the State Academic Senate is conducting a study focused on part-time faculty (their sense of belonging to the institution(s) where they work, and what effect (if any) this sense has on how they interact with students in their work.) I told her that we probably have at least one or two folx at Miramar who would participate, so she sent me the following email. She is looking for both instructional and non-instructional part-time faculty members. Please see her email below and pass it along to anyone who you think might be interested. Her email is at the bottom of her email.

Hello Pablo!

Thank you for being willing to share! It's a study about part-time faculty, their sense of belonging to the institution(s) where they work, and what effect (if any) this sense has on how they interact with students in their work. This is why I'm looking for both instructional and non-instructional faculty members.

They must have a current part-time assignment with no full-time position at any other school (including the UCs or CSUs), nor a full-time position at a job outside of education. I'm looking for a variety of perspectives, so I encourage anyone who meets the requirements to email me at Lindsay.Weiler@csu.fullerton.edu with their name and a personal (non-work) email address (they can use a work email address if they need to, but they will need to know that sensitive information may be shared through the email regarding the study), as well as their position and where they work.

I'll be sending the recruiting flyer and informed consent forms to them from my Fullerton email address when they reach out. And they can certainly reach out if they have any questions!

Thank you again so much for sharing, and please let me know if you need anything else from me or have any questions!

With Best Regards,
Lindsay Weiler-Leon
